

It's 12:00 PM. It's your hour of caring.

The Question

An employee under my management was spreading rebellious vibes in our company. I reported him to my higher ups, and he was fired. Someone in my team asked me why; may I tell him to deter negative attitudes?

The Answer

If your goal is to improve work attitude, saying you caused someone to get fired is likely to achieve the opposite. It would be more effective to spread positive vibes.

To make the point that this behavior results in being let go, you may share just the barest minimum that will accomplish this. If just a vague “He didn’t act the way we expect our employees to,” will point him in the right direction, don’t say more than that.

hour of caring

Invite your friends and family to join →

Email “I’m in” to hourofcairing@cchfglobal.org

Whatsapp “I’m in” to 845-608-7257